Mani Djazmi sits in for Peter White with news and information for the blind and partially sighted.

Why underground is better than overground when it comes to trains.

Why, despite the recession, 20,000 people with severe sight loss could be better off.

Could a community radio station unearth new talent that could give our presenters a run for their money?

Peter White with news and information for the blind and partially sighted.

We test a selection of new gismos from the Sight Village exhibition of technology for visually-impaired people. Our gadget guru, Ian Macrae, takes a closer look at a labelling 'pen' which promises to help you sort your peas from your peaches, among other things.

Also we go behind the microphone with the blind and partially-sighted radio students at Redstone FM when they go live on air for the very first time. Reporter Johny Cassidy visits the Redhill radio station which pledged to offer these opportunities as part of its licence application to Ofcom.
